Kirlian Photography is a method used to photograph the bio-electric energy of the body. The photograph is produced by a high energy interaction between a subject and an electric field. When an electrical charge is applied to an object (finger tip, coin, etc) photons are produced which in turn exposes the photographic paper and produces the distinctive corona.

The first electrographic images were obtained back in 1892 by a Polish doctor and physicist Jacob Jodka-Narkiewich. Narkiewich, a widely educated man, observed that pictures from healthy people differed from those of sick people. Similarly, differences were seen between electrographs of people who were tired or excited, sleeping or awake. He even devised a technique to determine psychological compatibility between people. His work stimulated great interest in the medical community in a paper published in 1911. However, interest gradually waned due to the development of the new X-Ray technology.

In 1939 Semyon Kirlian and his wife Valentina took up the reins again and like Narkiewich, were intrigued to find that the glow or corona, which was shown to surround the fingers, changes its shape and size depending on the individual's mental-emotional condition.

Some Uses of Kirlian Photography at CHWC

Assessment of:

- the effectiveness and progress of any treatment
- effect of toxins on the body's energy
- the effect of nutritional supplements on the body
- the location of 'energetic block's in the body
- emotional wellbeing
- Spiritual connectedness

Case Study

Before acupuncture

After acupuncture

This person complained of low back ache (constant) and periodic sharp pains in the neck. Also complained of menstrual problems (Liver related) and discussed emotional issues in her marriage. A definite distortion can be seen in the corona in Photo I in the area of the corona relating to the Heart. The TCM primary diagnosis was Liv Blood deficiency giving rise to Liv Qi Stagnation with a secondary patterns of He Qi deficiency and Sp Qi deficiency.

Photo II shows a clear improvement following acupuncture specifically for back pain. This individual went on to experience a significant reduction in all symptoms over the course of subsequent acupuncture sessions.

What does Kirlian Photography show?

Contrary to popular belief, Kirlian photography does not show the general energy (aura) of the body. Clinical experience and the author's research to date indicates the degree of integrity and brightness of the corona has a much more profound meaning; the quality (brightness and integrity) of the corona may be more a reflection of the quality (or strength) of an individual's spiritual 'connectedness'. Also, the photo can show the physical location of energetic 'blocks' in the body.
